RENO'S GROWTH THROUGH DIVORCE IS REVEALED

FIRM REMAINS IN EXISTENCE WHEN BOTH MEMBERS ARE AFTER DECREES

One secret of how Reno grows through her divorce courts was divulged this morning by the enterprising cleaning and pressing firm of Bloch & Stichman, of Center and First streets, says the Gazette.

This firm is to continue as a Reno asset. Even if business was not first class here, the firm is prevented from removing itself to New York by the sad fate of its friend, Henry Finkelstein, who got a divorce in a local court some time ago, and who, according to a New York paper lies in jail, unable to furnish bail, having been arrested for non-support of his first wife and family even after having married another woman.

It is concluded therefore, by the firm of Bloch & Stichman, that a Reno divorce is to be trusted farther in Reno than in New York.

"What grounds did Finkelstein have for securing a divorce?" asked a reporter of the firm.

"Coffee grounds," promptly replied Mr. Bloch of Bloch & Stichman. "He didn't have any."

Which may explain his troubles in little old New York.

Iris Bloch, senior member of the cleaning and pressing firm, came from New York four days before his partner, Morris L. Stichman arrived.

He filed papers for a divorce from Dora Bloch, September 17. His partner, Mr. Stichman, followed suit Saturday, his complaint asking for a decree from Ida Stichman on grounds of desertion.
